I Should Have Stayed in Bed!

By Michael William Hogan

I had no clue of things to be in the dismal day ahead;
'cause if the future I could see
I would have stayed in bed.

Some coffee and some cornflakes
is how I start my day;
Curdled milk would be my first mistake
because I ate it anyway.

Then on my daily walk to work
I passed beneath a tree;
I must have scared a giant bird
'cause It took a crap on me!

I had no choice, could not be late
so I threw away my sweater;
But little did I know just then,
things would not get much better.

I took a shortcut through a park,
that was a big mistake;
Halfway across I heard a bark
a dog was charging me!

I dared not run, I stood my ground,
friend or foe I could not peg;
I soon was mounted by this hound
as he began to hump my leg!

I screamed until I lost my voice
but he must have eaten spinach;
I was no match, I had no choice but to let the damn thing finish.

I could not throw away my pants,
was already late for work;
I hoped my boss by slimmest chance would for once not be a jerk.

I ran the final hundred yards,
my stomach was in knots;
My breakfast was not sitting well,
my eyes were seeing spots.

My boss was waiting at the door,
a pink slip in his hand;
The sight of being unemployed
was more than I could stand.

I swallowed hard, it mattered not,
my stomach did so hurt;
My breakfast came up wet and hot and hurled on boss' shirt.

Oh, what a day, turned out to be,
I should have stayed in bed;
My boss he won't stop chasing me,
if he catches me, I'm dead!
